Attack On Le Ham

Company G, moving forward to bring their firepower to bear on the enemy, was caught in this devastating concentration of fire. Capt. Irvin Bloom, the company commander, was killed outright and John Nero seriously wounded. The shelling was so intense the men could only hunker down in any depression they could find. The call for "Medic!" was heard up and down the line. T/Sgt. Carl Smith (Madison, W. Va.) and Carl Gassner (St. Meinrad, Ind.) were killed and Frank Pozar (Campbell, Ohio) was wounded. The 3rd Battalion of the 8th Infantry was on the right, recoiled from this heavy concentration of fire.

During the afternoon, Col. Ekman considered sending the 1st Battalion, 505, around the right flank, but this would have meant going into the 8th Infantry sector. At that point he learned that the 8th, also under intense fire, was digging in for the night; he ordered his troops to do the same.

The morning of 10 June, the 1st and 2nd Battalions of the 505 moved around the right flank of the 325 and attacked toward Montebourg station. The 2nd Battalion of the 325 set up a perimeter defense, licked their wounds and sent out patrols toward Le Ham. Lt. Thomas Herlihy, Company F, was killed on one of these probing patrols, and Lt. George N. Greene, 2nd Battalion S-2, was killed on a reconnaissance patrol.

The 505 battalions were successful in taking Montebourg station on the 10th and were in position to give some covering fire on the attack toward Le Ham. The railroad running NW to Montebourg station was selected as the line of departure. On 11 June, as Company F awaited orders to move out, Maj. Gen. Ridgway arrived on the scene and asked Capt. Joe Gault what was the situation. Gault responded that they were being held up. At that, Ridgway said, "Captain Gault, this is not a volunteer proposition. Move your company out!" They moved!
